GSU faculty met with HKBU for Potential Dual PhD in Drug Design (November 2013 - February 2014)

HKBU will recruit doctoral students and offer courses in the first two years at their Haiman campus supported by Haiman City Government. The students will be matriculated to a few US universities, such as The Ohio State University and Georgia State University, among others, to continue doctoral studies and dissertation. Binghe and others met with HKBU to discuss implementing this initiative.

Research Collaboration in Geosciences (June 2013 – TBC)

An active research collaboration currently exists between a GEOS faculty member (Daniel Deocampo) and the Head of HKBU's Geography Department (Bernhart Owen). These two investigators are part of an international team assembled by the Smithsonian Institution's Human Origins Program to analyze sediment cores obtained in Kenya. Data derived from these cores was expected to facilitate further determinations of paleoclimate change(s) associated with hominid evolution. Dan Deocampo was awarded a COAS DEEP funding that brought three HKBU Geography faculty to GSU April 29 - May 5, 2014 to convene a research symposium and develop specific funding proposal plans for the following year. Dan was also awarded a $400K NSF grant (award year unconfirmed) and Bernie Owen (HKBU) was a collaborator. Owen and Deocampo conducted research in Kenya in June 2014.
