Gadjah Mada University Students complete Dual Degree at GSU (July 2011 - December 2012)

After 18 months of intensive study, 15 Indonesian graduate students returned to their home country after picking up their degrees from GSU’s Andrew Young School of Policy Studies at the fall commencement ceremony. With two and a half years of advanced studies behind them, these students have earned two master’s degrees in applied economics. This cohort is the first of two in a dual-degree program supported by USAID Indonesia. The program between Gadjah Mada University and GSU was announced in 2010. About three-quarters of the students are civil servants on leave from their posts in the Ministry of Finance in Indonesia. The rest came to the program from academia, think tanks and provincial governments. The second wave of Indonesian students arrived on campus in July 2012. A similar short-term international program supporting two cohorts of Indonesian students started at GSU in 2002.
